

The Royal College of Pathologists
Pathology: the science behind the cure

Glucose

This represents a molecule of glucose, the sugar that the body uses as fuel. If the body doesn't make enough insulin, the hormone that controls blood sugar levels, diabetes may develop.

Clinical biochemists are scientists who measure chemicals, such as glucose, in the blood. They play an important role in the management of people with diseases such as diabetes.